There are more strange earth/sky sounds coming out of Wisconsin. I found this article interesting as it was a) from a very reputable newspaper, and b) the sounds were obviously heard by many. There were 150 911 calls regarding the noises on the same night.

While these noises seem to be different than the trumpet-type noises being reported elsewhere, I wouldn't be surprised if there was a link.

In Clintonville, mysterious things go boom in the night

By Meg Jones of the Journal Sentinel March 19, 2012

There's one thing everyone here agrees: It was really noisy.

Exactly what it sounded like is where Clintonville residents differ.

Jordan Pfeiler thought it sounded like fireworks exploding underwater.

Fay Mavis' 27-year-old grandson thought it sounded like a 90-ton wrecking ball slamming into something, while Mavis said it sounded like huge chunks of ice falling from her roof. But then she realized in this heat, ice chunks are long gone.

Marge Bickford thought somebody drove a car into the front of her home.

Beverly Demitriou thought a critter had sneaked into her basement and was causing bedlam.

City Administrator Lisa Kuss said it sounded like a jackhammer.

Cats and dogs didn't know exactly what it was, of course, but they howled and meowed anyway.

A series of loud bangs and booms woke up folks on the northeast side of this Waupaca County community shortly before 2 a.m. Monday and continued off and on until at least 8 p.m. The rattling, shaking, vibrations and noises induced people to pick up their phones and dial 911 as Clintonville's police dispatch center lighted up with more than 150 calls.

The source of the racket? No one knows.

No one seems to know what's going on. They are meeting at one the highschoools to discuss what to do. Many people are looking to move out. It's been on the news out here for the last three days. It wont stop.

I have been saying this for ages - ECD - I agree with Da Vinci.

This is the only thing I can see that could be responsible for these noises.

Earth Crust Displacement fits the bill exactly.'

ECD will start with an increase in Volcanoes, earthquakes, animal die offs, etc...

ECD will also start with strange noises, bangs and booms as the bottom of the continents and countries fall away into the earths core.

ECD will also be accompanied by sink holes as parts of the earth fall away underneath countries and continents into the earths mantle.

ECD will also be accompanied by changes on other planets such as warming and such like since earth crust displacement will be connected to events at both the planetary level and solar level in our solar system.

ECD will also be responsible for some Global warming with an increase in co2 as the molten mantle of the earth creeps higher towards the surface.

So it's possible that the sounds aren't because of the quake, but the sounds are so loud they're being picked up by seismographs?
